My training regarding standards of conduct relating to treatment, interview, or interrogation of detainees was the training I received during training school in 1985 and as an agent in the field for the subsequent 17 years. Nobody specifically addressed what to do while assigned to a military installation if you observed or heard about inappropriate treatment.

25. (Optional) In what ways can the FBI improve training on this subject for future deployments or assignments?

Address the subject - either formally or informally. It was my observation upon my return from GTMO that nobody at FBIHQ really wanted to discuss the matter.

D. Comments

26. Please provide any additional information concerning training for overseas deployments or assignments of FBI personnel you believe is relevant.

My partner at GTMO (SSA [redacted] who is now retired) and I provided training to SAs from FBI and CITF and interview teams from the Military regarding behavioral approach to interview strategy. We developed and delivered a PowerPoint presentation specifically addressing the issue of respect and rapport building with detainees. This type of training was not being presented in any other environment at the time.

I provided additional comments and observations to a U. S. Navy Lieutenant Commander (LCDR) who was assigned to GTMO as part of the team planning the tribunals, towards the end of my tenure there. The concerns I made were general in nature but specifically advised that interview teams at GTMO should not be involved in any kind of interview strategies that were not respectful and built on rapport. [redacted] and I also had conversations with the CTF on scene commander at the time regarding interview strategies and why they needed to be built on rapport building and respect. We literally pounded this notion into the heads of all with whom we came into contact.

I also provided training at the Military Intelligence Training Academy in Ft. Huachuca, AZ to approximately 75 military reservists who were on their way to GTMO. This training was the same that we provided to our people in GTMO - respect, rapport building interview strategies.
